Dr. Ed Millican

“When Community Colleges Serve the Community – how service learning programs can motivate our students and save the world.” Service learning means giving students the opportunity to become involved in projects of benefit to the larger community, as part of their regular educational program. In other words, they apply in practice the concepts they learn about in class. Research has shown that such programs lead to higher levels of student retention and success, besides combating public apathy, promoting civic engagement, and sparking projects of social betterment. Other local institutions of higher education are doing it. Come to this workshop and learn how it’s done.
